Approach —————

For many years, most medical and health-related research was done solely on men, and it was assumed that women had the same health problems and needs. We now realize that this is not true. The symptoms and progression of health issues differ between men and women due to their unique physiology, and both genders may benefit from different health strategies. One concern exclusive to men involves the prostate.

As a man ages, his prostate will often change. It may become enlarged, which can result in a variety of difficulties with urination.

Issues that begin with slightly more frequent urination and less ability to start a stream of urine may initially go unnoticed. However, over time, the prostate can become so enlarged that it may block urine from passing from the bladder to the urethra. While the exact amount of enlargement varies, the prostate is approximately the size of a walnut at age 30 but can grow to the size of a lemon by the age of 70. Eventually, this enlargement can cause a backup of urine, resulting in the incomplete emptying of the bladder, which can lead to urinary tract infections. Additionally, due to the blockage of the urethra, the bladder muscles have to work harder. This can cause them to thicken and become overly sensitive, which may further increase the frequency of both urination and nightly sleep interruptions.

Men in their early 50s may experience inflammation of the prostate gland (prostatitis) or BPH: non-cancerous prostate enlargement. According to figures from the Cleveland Clinic, half of all men will have symptoms of BPH by the age of 50, and that number increases to 80 percent by the age of 60.

Although the exact cause of BPH is unknown, studies indicate that it may relate to testosterone's conversion to a potent hormone called dihydrotestosterone (DHT).

Saw Palmetto Berry Oil Extract —————

Traditional saw palmetto has been used for general wellness for the past 200 years. Recent research in relation to saw palmetto extract and prostate health has been extensive. The extract is rich in fatty acids and phytosterols, which are a type of lipid found in plant cell membranes. AIM's saw palmetto berry oil extract contains sitosterol and campesterol, two plant sterols that may block the absorption of cholesterol through the intestine [1]. Many poor quality supplements use saw palmetto berry powder instead of the berry extract in order to keep costs down, but this alternative provides only a fraction of the benefits.

Studies indicate saw palmetto suppresses DHT activity by inhibiting 5-alpha-reductase, the enzyme responsible for conversion of testosterone into DHT. Furthermore, the Journal of the American Medical Association reported that 320 mg a day of saw palmetto extract improves urinary symptoms as effectively as prescription drugs. ReAssure SP provides 320 mg of saw palmetto extract standardized to 85 percent fatty acid content per serving.

Pumpkin Seed Oil

Some European countries have been using pumpkin seed extracts because they contain β -sitosterol (plant sterol) that inhibits DHT in a similar way as saw palmetto. A study found that more than 80 percent of patients taking 300 mg of pumpkin seed oil daily experienced improvement in bladder function, stronger urinary flow and reduction in the frequency of nighttime urination.

The pumpkin seed oil used in the ReAssure SP formula is pure virgin oil produced only by cold-press and filtration without using any solvents, additives or other synthetic agents. ReAssure SP contains 240 mg of pumpkin seed oil per serving, providing optimal results when combined with saw palmetto berry oil extract.

Zinc Citrate

Clinical evidence indicates that healthy prostate cells contain more zinc than unhealthy ones. Furthermore, healthy men have much more zinc in the prostate than in other soft organs, such as the liver and kidneys. Although the reason for this is not clearly understood, zinc's natural abundance in the prostate of healthy men suggests it is important.

In addition to prostate benefits, zinc is also an essential component in the body's enzyme process, acting as a stimulant for nearly 100 different enzymes. ReAssure SP provides 15 mg of zinc (as zinc citrate) per serving.

Lycopene

Lycopene is an antioxidant in the carotenoid family, giving tomatoes their red color. Although it is a carotenoid just like beta-carotene, lycopene is not linked to vitamin A activity. As an antioxidant, lycopene protects cells from free radical damage that can cause many health-related issues.
